ASTRONOMY AND METEOROLOGY

BY WALTER H. SMITH, MONTREAL,
President of the Astro-Meteorological Institute
Author of "Smith's Planetary Almanac and Weather Guide" "Lunar Influence on Vegetation," "Toronto Almanac for 1885," formerly Associate Editor of "Farmer's Weather Bulletin" and "Advance."

CALENDAR.

Thursday, October 14—Sun rises 5.15, sets 5.17.
Friday, 15—Saturn 10° from the sun.
Saturday, 16—Halley and Latimer meet in 1555.
Sunday, 17th—Seventeenth after Trinity.
Monday, 18—St. Luke.
Tuesday, 19—John Adams born, 1735.
Wednesday, 20th—Moon at last quarter, 9.40 m.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Week ending Wednesday, Oct. 20th; is likely to soon generally cloudy, changing to wet and windy; high winds in sections, with thunderings and heavy rains in the Western States and Western Canada; also, sleety and rainy, according to locality—Fine—Cool, with local frosts fronts and scattered showers.

The week ending Wednesday, Oct. 27; Showers in sections—Generally fine weather, warm for the season—Fall Rain showers, with wind, and weather, rains South, sleet and snow North.

AN UNUSUAL display of unusual astronomy was noticed over the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the 6th. Pilots who witnessed it declare the display to have been the brightest for forty years. It lasted from 10 until midnight.

—

DEW OF THE LEMNOS was in charge of the recent sports at St. Hyacinthe called on me to release a fine day for the sports. I selected Friday last. The day was beautifully fine and warm.

—

A CONTINUOUS IMPROVEMENT of the north as most of my readers know, is continually going on owing to the mystery of shooting stars that fall. So frequent are these bodies that a western scientist considered the sun's heat mathematical simply by his perpetual bombardment. But few who are quite aware of the fact of this perpetual bombardment of the earth are acquainted with the fact that in the Pacific ocean, between Tahiti and Honolulu, at a depth of 2,250 fathoms, a vast layer of cosmic dust is said to exist. Implumbido as it falls on the land and becomes mixed with other substances, the sun shields its accumulation until after innumerable centuries a wonderful story of continual accumulation of meteoric matter is told.

—

SEPTEMBER 1886, at Montreal gave a mean temperature of 57° 23' or below the average mean for the past 12 years, which is 58° 8'. The greatest heat was 92° 7' on the 8th; greatest cold 34° 2' on the 22nd a range of 58° 5'. The highest barometer reading was 30.320 on the 3rd, lowest, 29.022, on the 19th. The aurora was observed on the 20th, a lunar halo on the 18th and thunderstorms on two days. The first frost (spitzbergen to tender plants) occurred on the 22nd.

—

TWO SMALL COMETS have recently made their appearance, one in the Northern, the other in the Southern heavens. That in the Southern constellation was discovered by FINLAY at the Cape observatory, and is believed by Dons of Albany to be a reappearance of one of Mach's periodical comets, one of which is supposed to return every 5½ and the other every 7½ years. The telegrams do not state which comet is meant, but it is no doubt the one of short period. It is moving still further South, and is therefore of small interest to observers here. Not so that discovered by Hansen at Nashville on the 5th and 6th, which is described as then pretty bright and moving North-east. At its discovery the celestial stranger was in the constellation Leo, Right Ascension 10 hours, 23 mins., 5 sec. Declination North 9° 10'. This place is in the morning sky before sunrise.

—

A MONTH OF EARTHQUAKES.

A full record of shocks experienced at Charleston from the beginning of the trouble on August 27th up to and including September 30th is of interest. It is as follows:—

Aug. 27 ..... 1 shock, slight
29 ..... 1 shock, slight
Sept. 1 ..... 1 shocks, destructive
2 ..... 4 shocks, severe
3 ..... 2 shocks, severe
4 ..... 2 shocks, severe
5 ..... 2 shocks, slight
6 ..... 1 shock, moderate
7 ..... 1 shock, slight
8 ..... 1 shock, slight
9 ..... 1 shock, slight
10 ..... 1 shock, slight
11 ..... 2 shocks, moderate
12 ..... 1 shock, severe
13 ..... 1 shock, severe
14 ..... 1 shock, severe
15 ..... 1 shock, moderate
16 ..... 1 shock, slight

In the record no notice is taken of any slight tremor of the earth, many of which occurred during August and which were imagined.

It will be noticed that the shocks are cyclonic; one in new moon last week's LUNATIC—began when the moon passed from Quadrature towards conjunction with the sun and terminated in conjunction with Saturn. It will also be noticed that earthquakes occurred almost every day up to, and including Sept. 16th, when they ceased completely for six days or until the 21st. Why the 16th—Saturn on the ecliptic, quadrature—then, almost in the old spot, overtaking Saturn again on the 22nd—when another shock occurred. The 27th was a day of several aspects, Mercury being with the moon, Uranus with Saturn, Venus at superior conjunction and the moon at conjunction with the sun. This, consequently, was the only day when forecast was wanted for any general trouble could be accumulated, and, and as on the 27th as stated by the to-fish WEATHER. A glance at the table shows that there was a shock—excepting that of the 21st—since the 21st occurred on the 27th. Another coincidence was that the table may be put to, to show that the trouble is most certainly lessening instead of increasing; as the weather Ottawa gave wishes to make us believe.

—

METEOROLOGICAL.

Special Advance Report.

TIBBITS.

The month of August entered in the middle of a period of high barometer, which was followed in turn, by an interval of from ten to fifteen days of excessive heat and drought. The average temperature, 70° 4' is 1° 3' above the August average for the past six years, and the amount of precipitation has 2.85 in less than the average for the same time. The highest August mean temperature recorded at this observatory was in 1883, when it was 77° 7'; and the greatest excess of rain, fall, 10.60, in 1882. Though there were several intervals of heavy rainfall, the drought and lightning during this month, was in nature very moderate, contrasting greatly with that which occurred in the same month last year.

Unusual brilliancy was seen on striking the western sky on the night of the 29th. In the evening of the 28th, a hail plantation occurred which fell three minutes previous to sunset. I have been experimenting at weather prophecy for some years past, and have become enthusiastic over the success already attained.

Idalia Enterprise. L. J. HAYWOOD.

—

FOST HARVESTER.

August entered with a rain storm; 2nd, fair; 3rd and 4th, cool and windy; 5th, fair, with a slight frost; 6th, warmer; 7th, cloudy; 8th, warm; 9th, warm; 10th, fair; 11th, hot, thunderstorm; 12th; 13th, windy; 14th, fair; 15th, fair; 16th, cool; 17th, cloudy; 18th, warm; 19th, warm; 20th, warm; 21st, cloudy; 22nd, warm; 23rd, warm; 24th, showers; 25th, fair; 26th, fair with hoop-50 deg. at sunrise; 27th, fair; 28th, hot; 29th, cloudy; 30th, a rain storm; 31st, fair; 27th, very warm; 28th, hot, with thermometer 95 deg. in the shade; 29th, warm; 30th, foggy; 31st, a rain storm.

Melville Village. JOHN S. HOLME.

—

WISCONSIN.

The extensive drought of four months here was broken with 3 inches of water in the second week in 22nd and 23rd of totals of 4½ for the month. This was a very welcome relief, quenching the forest fires and preventing great damage in many parts of this state. The mean temperature at the mean record was 70 deg. 17; Long. 74, 74 deg. 22; Aug. 1886, 77 deg. 14. There were 2 clear and fair days and but very light showers, and no thunder and lightning. A rattling hail storm with thunder on the 6th, hail falling only in spots or narrow strips of varying size, in some places some very considerable portions of the time. The month gave a maximum of 90 deg. on the 16th; minimum, 42 deg. on the 31st.

Shawano. WM. WEBER.

—

"My daughter has taken the medicine faithfully, according to direction, and her health and spirits are now perfect. The humor is all gone from her face." Wm. Wright, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is in such cases.

—

IN A DANGEROUS CONDITION

any man, woman or child is in a dangerous condition when neglecting a constipated state of the bowels. There can be no perfect health without a regular action of this function. Burdock Blood Bitters cure constipation by imparting a healthy tone to all the secretions.

SOME SHORT SERMONS.

BY BROTHER BANDER.

My children, do you mean that trouble a long as? worry road to reach the promised milk point, as he man wont some things that sick in the journal, and most adoptly applied ed. Napoleon had the worse been discovered on his gray upon that a second to the very bottom of one's heart.

—

AT A CHINESE RESTAURANT.

I went with my friend, At eight o'clock in the evening we entered the restaurant of Jimmy Sing Sing, at 32 Bell street, New York. Mong Sing Wah is known as the Celestial Delmonico, of New York, and his place is a resort for many of the Celestials who are on the business streets of their fortunes, working in this country and sending home their early return to the homes they left behind them in China, or, rather, Hong Long. But to the dinner. There was a portion of it before us, and as, according to my friend's my notion, I took up my chop-sticks with an air that was meant to convince the other customers the idea that I was a pedigreed in the manner, and, in fact, I was a chop-sticks all my life. These instruments of the Celestial consist of two pieces of wood on a long pencil, and are made of hard black wood. Two of them are furnished to each person at table. Despite my efforts to the contrary, I dropped one of them in a few lines. I did not know how to eat with my best pen-knife and fork, and I felt I would know how to properly handles fork. A waiter observed I dropped the variable took pity on me and showed me how to handle them. It is not at all difficult, when you get the swing of it. You must hold one of the sticks firmly in the hollow of your right over it, hollow of the hand, as a pen of a boy holds his pen, and you must be: ? only between the third and second fingers of the right hand. The other stick is held lightly, as a good pressure inside his pen between the first and second fingers of the hand of the pen. The chop-sticks are used for everything in the world. It is a Chinese restaurant, the pie is cut into small and dice, so, as that it can be conveniently handled with the chop-sticks. You bread in never served at a Chinese dinner, the place of the "staff of life" being taken by bamboo or "tuse" or "rice" as called by the Celestials. Nobody can eat rice like the Chinese. Nobody can eat before you it is beautifully white, dry and nutritious, and, when properly prepared, cooked. It is not mushed into her, but every grain is separate and distinct, and immense quantities are used in the manner in which it is served. The Chinese are adepts at the art of making a rice pudding, which is made up of Young's or Parker's pen with eggs, it is a kind of a pen, and it is a kind of a pen, and it is a kind of a pen, and

MARJORIE'S ERRAND.

AN ENGLISH STORY.

Mrs. Lennardson was lanking vexed as well as worried when she came from the housekeeper's room to join her daughters; and she waved away the drawing one of them held up for her inspection.

"By-and-by, Nora. I cannot look at it now. Was there ever anything so provoking? I thought we were settled with really good, reliable servants. Cook mismanages her so admirably, that a new housemaid will do with a little instruction; and Marjorie—why! I was beginning to think of Marjorie as a fixture; one of those stupid, awkward, but thoroughly trustworthy women, who would never think of going away to better herself; and here she has just been giving us notice."

"How very odd!" exclaimed Nora and Winnie Lennardson, in the same breath. "But perhaps," added the former, "Marjorie left a sweetheart at her country home, and is going back there to be married."

"If that were the case, one should feel bound to say no more; but the unsparing part of this affair is that she will not confess why she proposes leaving us; indeed she reddens and seems very distressed when I question her; and not only persists in giving up her place, but wants to do so at once. Cook tells me she packed her box early this morning, so anger is not to be off."

"Will it be right to let her leave us so hastily?" inquired Nora. "She is a stranger in London, and has always served too steady and reserved to make any acquaintance."

"She has no intention of staying in London," Mrs. Lennardson replied, "I satisfied myself on that point. Neither has she another situation in view; but beyond a 'Yes' or a 'No,' she is so obstinately silent that at last I came away quite angry."

"Why not turn her over to Edwin, mamma?" asked Winnie, when the three ladies had exhausted their surprises and their conjectures. "Ever since Marjorie had that illness in the winter she has attended herself to Edwin, who was certainly very kind to her. It is in awe of you that seals her lips, my sister may persuade her to be more communicative."

"I wish that Edwin would try," Mrs. Lennardson responded, turning to her youngest and prettiest daughter, "who had been sitting at a distant table, apparently too much absorbed in a book to hear the animated tones of the speakers. But anyone who had peeped over her shoulder would have seen that the volume was upside down, with the page at which it lay open blistered with the tears that had fallen upon it.

Herewise she came forward as soon as she was spoken to, and readily consented to try the effect of her influence on Marjorie. If Edin Lennardson had a secret sorrow that lingers—if she were suffering from a miserable consciousness that yield and a hasty temper had marred her power from one who was very dear to her, that same pride helped her to conceal her regrets, Winnie said. Nora often confided to each other that their sister could not have been very deeply attached to Austin Daryll; and Mrs. Lennardson, though she sighed over her daughter's folly in quarrelling with a man who would have been an excellent husband, agreed, too, that Edin bore their sudden separation so bravely.

A sudden influx of visitors drove the subject of Marjorie into the background till she came into the room where her favorite amongst her young mistresses was changing her dress for dinner.

Mrs. Lennardson's under-housemaid was tall, strong, and swarthy; and she was mocked and teased by her fellow-servants for what they considered her old fashioned ways, as well as the slovenly and clumsiness of her movements.

And yet they liked her too; if her industry and firm adherence to the teachings of her youth not infrequently proved irritating and at variance with their laxer notions of right, she was always so good-tempered and obliging, so ready to take upon her own shoulders the tasks no one else cared for, that they would miss her greatly.

"Is it true that we are going to lose you?" Edin said to her as she went about the room on tiptoe, picking up dropped articles, folding and putting away skirts and bodices, and making the amazement resume the air of exquisite neatness that, as the owner would laughingly admit, it had never worn till Marjorie elected herself to the office of Miss Edin's maid. "Is it true, or have you found a better of your resentition? We shall be sorry to lose you, unless you convince me that it is for your good."

"Thank you, Miss Edin, thank you," said Marjorie hoarsely, her strongly marked features glowing with emotion; but she paused till the young lady glanced at her over her shoulder, querying her silence.

"Well, how is it to be? You will say been a little longer?"

The Marjorie took courage to say that, on the contrary, she would like to go on the morrow if possible, and Edin resumed the brushing of her hair with a strong pang of sympathy. If the stupid girl was determined to have her own way, what was the use of saying more?

But presently, as Marjorie was smoothing the rufled contents of her drawer, a little white hand was laid on her arm.

"I'm afraid, Mindge, it's my fault you are leaving. I know that of late I have frequently forgotten myself, and spoken to you as no woman should speak to one who serves her faithfully. But I have been in trouble, and I ask this my excuse; and in future I will be less selfish, more considerate."

Marjorie's eyes were moist now, and she was quivering in every limb.

"You shouldn't have said this to me, Miss Edin! Have I ever made a cross word from you? Haven't I seen and know—"

But the rising flush in the young lady's cheeks made Marjorie fear that she was trending on dangerous ground, for Marjorie checked herself, and added till she could speak in calmer tones.

"You must let me go, please, Miss. I shall be able to content myself without."

"But where are you going? Home?"

After some hesitation, Marjorie named a place, nestling in Surrey, the northernt coast, coupling the information with a timid request to be told the best way of getting there.

"For whose sake are you doing this?" Edin ventured to inquire; the girl only hung her head and gave no reply, surprise and sorrow in her eyes, and a flush of pride, prompted another and more urgent question.

"Can you take with you the comfort of knowing that you are acting rightly?"

Marjorie pondered awhile, then her eyes brightened.

"I was, Miss Edin, there's many things which young ladies as have been carefully brought up don't understand, and the like of likes of me can see no harm in. But please don't ask me any more questions, for I shall plague out if I don't make up my mind to this, and I thought it well out—on my knees."

After this, what more could Edin say? She proceeded to try the effect of her influence on Marjorie. If Edin Lennardson had a secret sorrow that lingers—if she were suffering from a miserable consciousness that yield and a hasty temper had marred her power from one who was very dear to her, that same pride helped her to conceal her regrets, Winnie said. Nora often confided to each other that their sister could not have been very deeply attached to Austin Daryll; and Mrs. Lennardson, though she sighed over her daughter's folly in quarrelling with a man who would have been an excellent husband, agreed, too, that Edin bore their sudden separation so bravely.

A sudden influx of visitors drove the subject of Marjorie into the background till she came into the room where her favorite amongst her young mistresses was changing her dress for dinner.

Mrs. Lennardson's under-housemaid was tall, strong, and swarthy; and she was mocked and teased by her fellow-servants for what they considered her old fashioned ways, as well as the slovenly and clumsiness of her movements.

And yet they liked her too; if her industry and firm adherence to the teachings of her youth not infrequently proved irritating and at variance with their laxer notions of right, she was always so good-tempered and obliging, so ready to take upon her own shoulders the tasks no one else cared for, that they would miss her greatly.

"Is it true that we are going to lose you?" Edin said to her as she went about the room on tiptoe, picking up dropped articles, folding and putting away skirts and bodices, and making the amazement resume the air of exquisite neatness that, as the owner would laughingly admit, it had never worn till Marjorie elected herself

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

MARJORIE'S ERRAND.

AN ENGLISH STORY.

Mrs. Lennardson was looking vexed as well as worried when she came into the housekeeper's room to hide her daughters; and she waved away the drawing-room of linen laid up for her inspection.

"By and by, Nora; I cannot look at it now. Was there ever anything so provoking? I thought we were suited with really good, reliable servants. Cook manager for an admiral; and a new housemaid will do with a little instruction; and Marjorie—why, I was beginning to think of Marjorie as a fixture; one of those stupid, awkward, but thoroughly reliable very women, who never seem think of going away to better herself; and now she has just been giving me notice."

"How very odd!" exclaimed Nora and Minnie Lennardson, in the same breath. "But perhaps," added the former, "Marjorie felt a sweetheart at her country home, and is going back there to be married."

"If that were the case, one should feel bound to say no more, but the exasperating part of the affair is that she will not consider why she proposes leaving us; it, indeed, she realises and seems quite distressed when I question her; and not only persists in giving up her place, but in so doing, I suppose, Cook tells me she packed her box early this morning, so anger is sure to be off!"

"Will it be right to let her leave us so hastily?" queried Nora. "She is a stranger in London, and has always seemed too steady and reserved to make any acquaintances."

"She has no intention of staying in London, Mrs. Lennardson, implied, "I satisfied myself on that point. Neither has she another situation in view; but beyond a 'Yes' or a 'No,' she is so obstinately silent that at last I came away quite angry."

"Why not turn her over to Edmamma?" asked Minnie, when the three ladies had exhausted their surprises and their conjectures. "Ever since Marjorie had that illness in the winter she has attached herself to Edie, who was certainly very kind to her. If I is sure of your last seals her lips, my sister may persuade her to be more communicative."

"I wish that Edie would try," Mrs. Lennardson responded, turning to her youngest and prettiest daughter, "who had been sitting at a distant table, apparently too much absorbed in a book on the liver the animated tones of the speakers. But anyone who had looked over her shoulder would have seen that the volume was upside down, with the page at which it lay open blistered with the tears that had fallen upon it.

Hearing, she came forward as soon as she was appealed to, and readily promised to try the effect of her influence on Marjorie. "If Edie Lennardson had a secret sorrow just then—if she were suffering from a miserable consciousness that pride and a hasty temper had parted her forever from one who was very dear to her, that same pride helped her to conceal her regret. Minnie and Nora often confided to each other that their sister could not have been very attached to Austin Daryll; and Mrs. Lennardson, though she sighed over her daughter's folly in quarrelling with a man who would have been an excellent husband, rejoiced, too, that Edie bore her solitary separation so brave-ly.

A sudden influx of visitors drove the subject of Marjorie into the background till she came into the room where her favorite amongst her young mistresses was changing her dress for dinner.

Mrs. Lennardson's under-housemaid was tall, strong, and swarthy; a girl who was mocked and teased by her fellow-servants for the stories they considered her old fashioned ways, as well as the slowness and clumsiness of her movements.

And yet they liked her too; if her heavy and firm adherence to the teachings of her youth not infrequently proved irritating and at variance with their lazier notions of right, she was always so good-tempered and obliging, so ready to take upon her own shoulders the tasks no one else cared for, that they would miss her greatly.

"Is it true that you are going to lose you?" Edie said to her as she went about the room on tiptoe, picking up dropped articles, folding and putting away skirts and bodices, and making the apartment resume the air of exquisite neatness that, as its owner would laughingly admit, it had never worn till Marjorie elected herself to the office of Miss Edie's maid. "Is it true, or have you thought better of your resolution? We shall be sorry to lose you unless you convince us that it is for your good."

"Thank you, Miss Edie, thank you," said Marjorie hurriedly, her strongly marked features glowing with a flush that, for a moment, disguised till the young lady glanced at her over her shoulder, querying her meaning.

"Well, how is it to be? You will stay have a little longer?"

"Then Marjorie took courage to say that, on the contrary, she should like to go on the same day possible, and Edie resumed the brushing of her hair with a shrug of her shoulders. If the stupid girl was determined to have her own way, what was the use of mystifying her?

But presently, as Marjorie was smoothing the ruffled contents of a drawer, a little white hand was laid on her arm.

"I'm afraid, Madge, it is my fault you are leaving. I fancy that of late I have frequently forgotten myself, and spoken to you as no woman should speak to one who serves her faithfully. But I have been ill, and I ask for this my excuse; and in future I will be less selfish, more considerate."

Marjorie's eyes were wet now, and she was quivering in every limb.

"You shouldn't have said this to me, Miss Edie! Have I ever minded a cross word from you? I haven't! I wouldn't mind!"

But the rising flush in the young lady's face should have warned her that she was treading on dangerous ground, for Marjorie checked herself, and spoke till she could speak in calmer tones.

"You must let me go, please, Miss. I shall be able to content myself without."

"But where are you going? Home?"

After some hesitation, Marjorie mustered a well-known sooper on the subject of her intended home, but information with a timid request to be told the best way of getting there.

"For whose sake are you doing this?" Edie asked, remembering the girl only hung her head and gave no reply, surprise and sorrow in her face and tone. "Is it for one who has proved herself unworthy of your good question.

"Can you take with you the comfort of knowing that you have nothing rightly?"

Marjorie reddened awhile, then her eyes brightened.

"Yes, Miss Edie, there's many things which young ladies as have been carefully brought up in their homes, and as has the likes of me can see no harm in. But please don't ask me any more questions, for I can't answer them."

"I didn't make up my mind to this till I thought it well out in my house." Edie.

After this, what more could Edie say? She knew Marjorie followed her to the door when she quitted the room, and even to the top of the stairs; but she took good not look back and by the gaslight by for which the girl was evidently pining. Perhaps, on the morrow, she repented, and went in search of her, it was too late; Marjorie was gone. Nora often handle of accessories, was go on.

II.

The sight of a neatly dressed young woman loitering on the beach long after the grey mists of twilight had driven the visitors away, and the children to bed, naturally attracted the attention of cottage mothers who were filling their pitchers and pails at the fresh water springs on the cliff side.

It was a busy time in the fisher-men's quarter. It was the uncertain season, and the catches were unusually large. The fishermen in the boats came into the bay laden with their silver prizes, and the fishwives and women had their washing and packing for the London markets, or, when this was over, the cooking of the day, the support town offering the surplus fish from door to door.

Times were extremely plentiful in consequence, so that the hard times of the winter were almost forgotten, it was earned by hard labor; and if the men risked their lives, it paid the women were glad to be left alone. And when a chorus of them were always were—darling, restless, white haired, sun-browned little monkeys, always climbing into dangerous places, or slipping off the end of the quay, to be hauled back by some frightened mother, who had been unfortunate enough to have her apron strings untied, and yet, how happy they were!

One of the women, who was resting awhile before she carried away her pitcher, gave a half-anxious sigh as she, too, turned to watch the stragglers. Molly Hare was not as sturdy built as the rest, and looked less unequal to her duty than the other women, accused for the peevish tone her voice had latterlmen she added to the complaining contents of the others.

"She's waiting for her lad, no doubt; but if he thinks she is such as we do, she'd go home and think no more of him. She'll risk she had if ever she's like our sis hungry boys, neither; and taxing enough to help father; and twice in the cradle thi's more trouble to me than all the rest."

"I tell ye, Molly, you wouldn't be without your baby girls in spite of your grumbling," she was the reply.

"And you've got a man that doesn't drink away a penny of his wages, and a good home, and Jim Harr never comes reeling home to frighten his babies with his shouting, or to blacken your eye for his pleasure."

"Oh, you poor soul!" cried Molly pitifully. "Jim Sam been beating you again?"

The woman laid a hand on her wife's wrongs, so thrilling, that she could help stopping to listen? Jim Sam was the cruelest of the fraternity, and so was the solitary stranger on the beach, till half an hour afternoon. Molly had found this identical girl sitting on the step of her cottage door, with her face hidden in her arms.

She was roughly but not unkindly questioned, and answered sullenly, and at last the story came from London that day, and Molly wondered but was ashamed why she had come here, she did not answer.

"Have you any going to get a decent bed at this time o' night? You can't go to the public—hain't fitting you should. What work can you do?"

"Anything," responded Marjorie promptly enough. "I'm strong and I'm willing."

"And so am I, willing enough," said Molly, with something like a groan, as she hurried into the cottage to see if she still had a few infants; but as for strong; I wish I were! But step in; you look a poundsmen in more nor Molly, I shall have half my bed to-night, and when the bents come is there, I can't say; mebbe in two hours if you can turn up your sleeves and mind mackerel."

There was plenty of wondering from Molly come to the little cottage that evening, accompanied by Marjorie, and little or three of the women were disposed to resent the presence of a stranger, but she was so quiet and obliging that the murmurs died away as soon as the hurry and bustle of filling the baskets commenced, and by her promptitude and skill in binding the cod, she soon made herself one of the gook-will of the fishermen.

Van Barr grumbled a little when he found her in his cottage. "I Wasn't it so full already," he asked, "that there was hardly room to set his one foot down? Humph! Well, I suppose I'll put a glimpse at his wife's pale cheeks.

"If she were willing to help a bit with the youngsters, he shouldn't say no to it."

Marjorie had not willed for this. She was capable of a good deal of industrious, and not only the fretful twins, but the smaller of the boys were soon fond of her, and would run out of school to meet her on the sands, and there usurped and kept out of mischief while the fisherman with his wife obtained a few hours of the rest they needed.

All that day and many succeeding ones she labored for the household, and was unstintingly praised given her; sister, and Molly Hare's voice lost its sharpness and her eyes their dull, aching look of misshared her burdens. The children, too, were not so unmanageable when she had the charge of them; and Jim Sam's pocket soller through this addition to his family circle, for the men were ready to insist on giving up all her earnings to their wives, and even sixpence invented it on rent, for a few shillings from the small sum she had brought with her, and which, as it might be needed by-and-by to carry her back to London.

Van Barr and Molly and Marjorie toiled for those who befriended her, but in the evening, when the cottage cleared, she would find her way to the end of the quay, and question the coastguardsmen or the old sailors hanging about there.

These inquiries always took the same form. There was a yacht named the Leebia that, unless she had been misinformed, would put in here for coaling purposes before her owner steamed away to the South Pacific; could no one tell Marjorie when it would arrive?

"Sir William won't leave Cowes till after the regatta," said one of the old salts.

"Was there any danger of the Leebia having left England without calling here at all?"

But the suggestion was loudly scouted. Sir William was too prudent to start on a long voyage short-handed and two of men he had engaged in Hull lived in the neighborhood, and had received orders to hold themselves in readiness. No, no, the Leebia had not started for the Pacific yet.

"Have you got a sweetheart abroad or hey, my lass?" asked one of the old men.

"Hey, the girls? No," was spoken too gravely to be doubted; and yet she would stand on the beach in the twilight, straining her eyes to be first to catch sight of the yacht. What could be the ormuld reason why she was so anxious about her boy?

At last the "Leebia" steamed into the bay and Marjorie left her work and even deserted the babies, to be overcome to the quay and before the yacht's boat brought on shore the owner of the vessel and his friends were to accompany him on his voyage.

Looking once again the men received a stranger with the usual suspicions, stand Marjorie, scanning the faces of the gentlemen as they passed, till she discovered the face she was hunging to behold.

Involuntarily she backed her hands together, and her heart beat loud and fast. Do the next five minutes and on the words she was hoping to say there were no more pending. What if her courage failed, and she should be too frightened for her well-meant interposition were in vain? How could she, who had never spoken a word—hope to do any good?

Sir William and some of his companions were talking and laughing as they went, and then Marjorie stepped forward and addressed to one of the gentlemen who were following more leisurely.

"Sir, I know you?" he asked, finding that she did not put up the position in question herself.

"Ksah," Marjorie made answer; "but I need to live with Mrs. Lennardson."

His brows contracted. "What have you to say to me?" he demanded, almost sternly.

"Not many words, sir. Only—that—that it was not Miss Edie who was false to Mr. Austin Daryll! It was her sister, Miss Nora.

The gentleman's face that had grown dark with sudden during those last few weeks flushed with pleasure, and Marjorie saw good incredulously. Aware that the gay, thoughtless Mrs Fitzhardy had caught the ear of people who were not fit associates for his pure-minded Edie, Mr. Austin Daryll had written to her, announce that, on and after May 1st, the lease would be closed, and he would be under my control, and having ample means to help, the gowns of the House may rely on receiving their bills. As heretofore, I am determined to be the sole person who shall be supplied with the best.

I have the honor to be your humble servant,
J. MORRIS.

Huntingdon, April 20th, 1880 1mf

REMOVAL.

F. W. BATES would informs the public that he has removed to Water Street, opposite the organ factory. All kinds of Boots and Shoes made to order promptly attended to. Rates reasonable.

Huntingdon, Sept. 8th, 1880. 6mf

Caskets & Coffins.

The Subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Caskets and Coffins in all styles and prices.

Burial Robes, Coffin Plates, &c., kept in stock.

First-class Hearse. Prices reasonable.

MRS. A. HENDERSON.

CASKETS & COFFINS

Always on hand, a fine assortment of Caskets and Coffins in all sizes.

BURIAL ROBES, PLATES, ETC.

Always on hand.

Orders filled at all hours, and prices moderate.

N. B.—Purchasers can have the use of Hearse free. 20—tf D. SHANKS.

THE DEATH-WATCH,

BY HARRIE WOODS.

In this case, the date between the nonence and the day he was to hang was so far apart—a matter of three months—that what is called the mental death in a prisoner was not immediately instituted. In those cases, a certain number is assigned to the unfortunate to be changed to a different cell, and he passed another sentence night and day for fear he will about the hangman. It is only at the very last that the condemned man gives small hope and takes to face his executioner.

In this case there was an appeal, and when that was decided against, he had not hopes that the Governor would commute the sentence, and the death watch was not necessary until the third day before the execution. The man was beaten up with hope, and whether that state of mind there was no hope, or a strong desire for life, it matters; there is no mistake about it. Day and night, he was sustained, and their eyes to be first to catch sight of the yacht. What could be the ormuld reason why she was so anxious about her boy?

At last the "Leebia" steamed into the bay and Marjorie left her work and even deserted the babies, to be overcome to the quay and before the yacht's boat brought on shore the owner of the vessel and his friends were to accompany him on his voyage.

Looking once again the men received a stranger with the usual suspicions, stand Marjorie, scanning the faces of the gentlemen as they passed, till she discovered the face she was hunging to behold.

Involuntarily she backed her hands together, and her heart beat loud and fast. Do the next five minutes and on the words she was hoping to say there were no more pending. What if her courage failed, and she should be too frightened for her well-meant interposition were in vain? How could she, who had never spoken a word—hope to do any good?

Sir William and some of his companions were talking and laughing as they went, and then Marjorie stepped forward and addressed to one of the gentlemen who were following more leisurely.

"Sir, I know you?" he asked, finding that she did not put up the position in question herself.

"Ksah," Marjorie made answer; "but I need to live with Mrs. Lennardson."

His brows contracted. "What have you to say to me?" he demanded, almost sternly.

"Not many words, sir. Only—that—that it was not Miss Edie who was false to Mr. Austin Daryll! It was her sister, Miss Nora.

The gentleman's face that had grown dark with sudden during those last few weeks flushed with pleasure, and Marjorie saw good incredulously. Aware that the gay, thoughtless Mrs Fitzhardy had caught the ear of people who were not fit associates for his pure-minded Edie, Mr. Austin Daryll had written to her, announce that, on and after May 1st, the lease would be closed, and he would be under my control, and having ample means to help, the gowns of the House may rely on receiving their bills. As heretofore, I am determined to be the sole person who shall be supplied with the best.

I have the honor to be your humble servant,
J. MORRIS.

Huntingdon, April 20th, 1880 1mf

REMOVAL.

F. W. BATES would informs the public that he has removed to Water Street, opposite the organ factory. All kinds of Boots and Shoes made to order promptly attended to. Rates reasonable.

Huntingdon, Sept. 8th, 1880. 6mf

Caskets & Coffins.

The Subscriber keeps constantly on hand a large assortment of Caskets and Coffins in all styles and prices.

Burial Robes, Coffin Plates, &c., kept in stock.

First-class Hearse. Prices reasonable.

MRS. A. HENDERSON.

CASKETS & COFFINS

Always on hand, a fine assortment of Caskets and Coffins in all sizes.

BURIAL ROBES, PLATES, ETC.

Always on hand.

Orders filled at all hours, and prices moderate.

N. B.—Purchasers can have the use of Hearse free. 20—tf D. SHANKS.

SOME SHORT SERMONS.

BY ARTHUR BARNES.

A note has been left on my desk avis me why do present sign has not produced Cherry Hopson or Milton. I answer to do effects dat such sign has produced of it ed' no' for itself.

Hoosnes was lookat upon as a wise man by his neighbors. Pub him w' his hat on nickle day, an' he wouldn't be twenty-four hours in the hot period to do jug for dat man. Ef he law would fore his to put his b', dat ain't his sugar nuts w' mout' ain't no' for itself.

Cheer was appointed to 47 at age 'n' 'tit of gals was a new thing. Dat ain't his sugar nuts w' mout' ain't no' for itself. Ef he law would fore his Justice of the Peace ter' fed a notice to Tyson to a three dollar horsepitl, he could drop down sumpun so he'd find it hard to wait so long a resolution for a month. Dat ain't his sugar nuts w' mout' ain't no' for itself.

The brigade went over the shoulder of the hill all a trot. At once they came down on the flank of the gang on the Pedodinn Heights. The brave Nolan was in the van. The sight of the enemy was a mass of shell struck him, ripping open his chest. His sword was struck, cleaving his left arm clean off, and shell, and grape, into the bellmat and swiftly silencing the thunder of the battle. Nothing loots was heard after. The ranks were broken. Terror-stricken, the enemy fled over, and rose again screaming with agony; and were cut down by the sabres. Not a man escaped to tell the tale of their fate. Not a man escaped to tell the tale of their fate. Not a man escaped to tell the tale of their fate

The ADVOCATE is sent to subscribers until an explicit order is received for its discontinuance, and all payment of arrearages is made as required by law. Remember that this publisher must be notified when a subscriber wishes his paper stopped. All arrearages must be paid.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at the Advertising Bureau of Messrs. S. M. Pettengill & Co., where advertisements may be made for it in NEW YORK.

THE ADVOCATE.

HUNTINGDON, OCTOBER 21, 1886.

The defeat of Hon. L. O. Taillon, Attorney-General, in Montreal East, is regrettable. He was one of the ablest member of the late Assembly, and as a member of the Government contributed in no small degree by his ability to the success which has admittedly attended their administration of the affairs of the Province.

As exchange says

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of Burlington, N. J., has raised $20, and offers it as a premium to the saloon keeper who will exhibit the best specimen of the continued drunkard at the coming county fair at Mt. Holly.

In the name of Christianity! From all such "christian temperance" women, good Lord, deliver us.

Dr. Cameron's majority of 78 out of 1781 accepted ballots is sufficiently narrow to show that gentlemen that he must satisfy his friends in future if he wishes to retain his seat in the legislature. This is the sixth time he has been elected to that position by this County. He defeated John J. Maclaren in 1874 by 376 votes; Andrew Oliver in 1875 by 256 votes, and since then has been three times elected by acclamation. That a gentleman comparatively a stranger to one-half the electors should run him so closely as did Mr. Saunders is proof that his record in the legislature is not altogether satisfactory, and that however popular he may have been in the past, whether deservedly or not, he can be turned against him.

The official returns for this County, as published in another column, give Dr. Cameron a majority of 78. Rumors of a contestation in the courts have been in circulation during the past week, but they are unfounded so far as we can learn, and there is not much probability of any action being taken to upset the election. From all reports gross carelessness characterized the management of affairs at some of the polling places. In Elgin particularly was this the case. Apart from the neglect (accidental, we presume) of the returning officer to have the commission of his deputy for that poll, which caused the opening of the poll to be delayed till one o'clock or later, we are also informed that a number of persons remained in the polling room continuously during polling hours and no attempt was made to keep them out, while persons were allowed to go into the ante-room with a vote while marking his ballot. The same occurred, we understand, at the Alfreton poll, where also the deputy returning officer is said to have twice opened the ballot box during polling hours. The officer probably was not aware that in doing so, he laid himself open to a heavy penalty, nor do we think fraud was intended; but the proceeding was a dangerous one, to say the least.

The result of the elections throughout the Province on Thursday last has now been ascertained beyond doubt, and shows that the Government's position is next to a debacle. Outside of those who have pronounced themselves for or against either party, there have been elected six members who are styled "Independents." Of these four are Nationalists with strong Conservative leanings, and in a pinch may be counted for the Government. These are: Messrs. Beauchamp, Two Mountains; Trudel, Champlain; Duclermais, Soulanges; and Larochelle, Dorchester. The other two are Turcotte of Three Rivers and Dr. Cameron, both of whom may be counted for the present Opposition. Turcotte has been a supporter of the Liberal party since 1879, and Dr. Cameron proves he quarrelled with his party only on the Riel question, without which he would have continued a follower of Mercier. This reckoning, gives the respective parties an increase of seats, as shown by the following list:—

Argenteuil, Owens	C
Bagot, Pica	I
Beauce, Bolduc	I
Beauharnois, Bisson	I
Bellechasse, Langelier	C
Berthier, Sylvestre	C
Bonaventure, Hartlin	C
Brome, Lawrence	C
Chambly, Rochon	C
Champlain, Trudel	I
Charlevoix, Martin	C
Chicoutimi, Robitaille	C
Chicoutimi and Saguenay	C
Compton, Hutchinson	C
Dorchester, Larochelle	I
Drummond & Arthabaska Grenier	C
Gaspe, Flynn	C
Hochelaga, Villeneuve	C
Huntingdon, Cameron	C
Iberville, Dunsan	C
Jacques Cartier, Ouimet	C
Joliette, Desjardins	C
Kamouraska, Lapointe	C
Laprairie, Charbonneau	C
L'Assomption, Forget	C
Laval, Leblanc	C
Lotbinière, Lemieux	C
L'Islet, Marcotte	C
Lévis, Langelier	C
Montmagny, Caron	C
Megantic, Jackson	C
Missisquoi, Spencer	C
Montcalm, Bernard	C
Montmagny, Dumoulin	C
Montmorency, Bergeron	C
Montreal East, Mathieu	C
Montreal West, Curran	C
Montreal West, Hutchinson	C
Napierville, Lafontaine	C
Nicolet, Dorion	C
Ottawa, Cormier	C
Ottawa West, Bergin	C
Portneuf, Tessier	C
Quebec East, Shehyn	C
Quebec West, Murphy	C
Quebec county, Langevin	C
Richelieu, Casgrain	C
Richmond and Wolfe, Ward	C
Rimouski, Martin	C
Rouville, Ste Marie	C
Shefford, Bousquet	C
Sherbrooke, Robertson	C
Soulanges, Bergeron	C
Stanstead, Baker	C
St. Hyacinthe, Mercier	C
St. Johns, Hormisdas	C
St. Maurice, Duplessis	C
Temiscouata, Pelletier	C
Terrebonne, Sanguinet	C
Three Rivers, Turcotte	I
Vaudreuil, Bourbonnais	C
Vendreuil, Lapointe	C
Verchères, Leclerc	C
Yamaska, Giard	C
	33 32

The election in Chicoutimi does not come off until the 25th Nov., and will in all probability result in the return of a Conservative, thus giving the Government a majority of one. The success of the Mercier party is due to the "none and nothing" cry which they have conducted the electoral contest, and can in no way be considered a condemnation of the Government's policy.

On the 11th instant, an important case was heard before Hon. Judge Belanger at Ste. Martine. The action of the mayor of the place, Cardinal, and a young farmer named Brunet, against the election of Messrs. Pierre Bergevin and J. Bouchard, elected school commissioners in July last. The contestants complained that the proceedings at the election in question were illegal and that persons not qualified were allowed to vote. The defendants claimed that everything was in order, irregularities of the law had not been observed at the election, no illegal ballot had been cast by anyone, because after the close of the poll the deputy returning officer found one of 100 or more, decided to go over the list of those who had voted and compare the names and votes of all not qualified. The Secretary-Treasurer produced his books and showed that no votes had been cast, the result being that the present defendants had a majority of five votes, and the chairman declared them elected, and everyone seemed satisfied and all separated good friends. Cardinal, one of the contestants, was present and did not protest against the action taken, on the contrary the revision was made at his request. A large number of witnesses were heard on both sides, and the matter was taken on deliberation.—Prayer.

LOCAL & DISTRICT.

The full term of the Court of Queen's Bench for this district has been postponed till the 2nd of November.

Mr. Robert Tyre, customs officer, Dundee, has been appointed postmaster at St. Regis, died at his home there yesterday, aged 70 had been ailing for some time.

Dr. Cameron has telegraphed to Mr. Mercier that he will support him in all measures consistent simply the administration of the Province.—Le Nouvelliste.

Thomas McIntyre, Newfoundland, while returning from the St. Anicet ploughing match on Tuesday, was thrown from his wagon and had his shoulder dislocated.

Mr. Ulric Lalonde, of St. Stanislas de Kostka, died on the 5th instant, at the age of 90 years. He was the father of 15 children, and had 95 grandchildren, 104 great-grandchildren, and 4 great-great-grandchildren.

During the storm of last Thursday night, the sailing ship Iris was wrecked on Lake St. Louis while running before the gale under bare poles. The crew were saved after hard efforts on the part of the village people.

A special term of the Superior Court for this District will be held from the 22nd to the 26th of November. The case of Rose vs. Sullivan will not be heard at this session. It has been continued till December 23rd.

John Sullivan, who has been wandering about the country the past summer, was taken to Longue Pointe Asylum on Monday, by order of the County Council. Dr. Cameron signed the necessary medical report after examination.

At the meeting of the Teachers' Institute at Montreal on Saturday, Huntingdon was chosen as the next place of meeting. Mr. Cameron was elected president, and Mr. James McGregor one of the vice-presidents. Mr. C. S. Holiday was elected a member of the council.

Another old settler has gone the way of all flesh. Mr. Michael Fee, of Elgin, died yesterday, after an illness of about ten days. He was an honorable, straightforward, upright man, and died as he lived, a fault. He settled in Elgin more than half a century ago, and has continued in the possession of the same property ever since till the day of his death.

The necessary petition has been prepared asking for a judicial recount of the ballots cast in the election in Huntingdon. A very large number of those were rejected, and some irregularities are alleged, the proof of which, however, would be within the province of the election court. Mr. Bergevin's friends think that the result of the judge's enumeration will be favorable to their candidate.

The second ploughing match of the parish of St. Anicet was held on the farm of Duncan Carrie on the 10th instant. There were only five competitors, three in the iron plough class and two in the wood plough class. The award of the judges was as follows: Iron ploughs—1 Alfred Fraser; 2 Duncan A. Carrie; 3 Thos. Gaynor. Wooden ploughs—1 John D. Carrie; 2 John Gaynor. The judges were Andrew Chambers and Malcolm McNaughton. At the conclusion of the ploughing, the competitors and visitors were entertained to dinner by Mr. Carrie.

The Liberals of Ste. Cécile, County of Huntingdon in the recent election are as follows:—

	Cameron.	Saunders.
Hemmingford Village	11	8
" Tp. No. 1	29	19
" " No. 2	42	17
" " No. 3	12	37
Hemmingford No. 1	14	41
" No. 2	31	61
Franklin No. 1	31	44
" No. 2	31	44
Hinchinbrooke No. 1	11	3
" No. 2	43	43
" No. 3	53	9
Elgin	30	52
Huntingdon	90	52
Godmanchester No. 1	41	29
" No. 2	60	7
" No. 3	30	34
St. Anicet No. 1	56	40
" No. 2	41	32
" No. 3	41	62
Dundee	48	66
	931	853
	853	31

Majority for Cameron 78

After the returns were all in from the various polling places on Thursday night, Dr. Cameron's friends formed a procession and, hand by the hand, paraded through the village, the Doctor being carried in a chair by a couple of stalwart friends. Arrived at his residence the member elect addressed his followers, thanking them for the support they had given him in the contest, and referring sarcastically to the supporters of his opponent, with an incomprehensible allusion to "devils," "sellers," "sharpers," and other sinful people, not mentioning "the ADVOCATE's dark horse" (which, however, was not in the race at all.)

BIRTHS.

TOLME—At the "Beaver," Westville Lines, the wife of John Tolme, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

SEALE—McGREGOR—At Huntingdon 20th Oct., 1886, by the Rev. James Watson, assisted by the Rev. J. H. Hair, Elliot Christian Seale, of St. Anicet, James McGregor, Inspector of Schools, to Jessie Seale, farmer, Coteau Landing, District of Montreal.

HEMMERSON—BEAMER—At Huntingdon on the 18th Oct., by the Rev. James Watson, George Albert Hemmerson, of Adelaide, daughter of Charles F. Beamer, of Athelstan.

PAYMENT—At Franklin Centre, P.Q., on Oct. 8th, by Rev. N. P. Yates, Thomas Flint to Florence Elizabeth, daughter of Hiram Rose, both of Franklin.

DUNN—HOPE—At Franklin Centre, P.Q., on Oct. 6th, by Rev. N. P. Yates, Albert Victor Dunn of Huntingdon, to Eva Melissa, daughter of Hiram Hope of Franklin.

HUTCHESON—BOYD—At St. George's Church, Chateauguay, on the 14th inst., by the Venerable Archdeacon Evans, M.A., Henry Hutcheson, of Montreal, to Lillie, youngest daughter of Lt.-Col. Boyd, of Chateauguay.

The newlyweds do not blind themselves to accept the interest of any tender.

Oct. 12th, 1886.

Shingles for Sale.

The undersigned is prepared to supply superior Pine Shingles, 18 inches long, at prices that defy competition.

MAXWELL STALKER,
Lewis St.

GRAIN! GRAIN!

The undersigned will pay the highest market price for all kinds of grain delivered at their Mill during the 11th inst.

McHUGH & CAMERON.
Huntingdon, Oct. 6th, 20-4

NOTICE

All parties indebted to the estate of A. L. Jenkins, deceased, will please call and settle on or before Nov. 1st 1886, or after that date all accounts will be handed to an attorney for collection.

MRS. ANNIE JENKINS,
Executrix.
Huntingdon, October 5th 1886. 20-4

FOR SALE OR TO LET.

MILLS STREET, situated in the thriving village of Huntingdon, P. Q., the building formerly occupied by its appointments, presents a favorable opportunity for any person wishing to go into business, personal inspection of premises invited. For proprietor having a forty years experience, wishes to retire. None but principals dealt with. For further information apply to

H. H. MIR.
Huntingdon, October 6th, 1886. 20tf

GRAIN NOTICE.

On and after Monday 11th Oct., we will pay the highest market price for Oats, Peas and Barley.

HENRY & McCALLUM.
39-4

FARM TO RENT.

The undersigned offers to rent his farm, consisting of 200 acres for a term of years. Also offers, by private sale, his entire stock of horses and cattle, comprising 2 horses and colts, and also his stock of milch cows of about 25 head. Time will be given to good parties.

PETER BRADY,
Helena P.O., Que.

BOOK-KEEPING,

Either double or single entry, by an experienced accountant. Best of references. Profit and loss accounts drawn out. Lessons given, fee 60c an hour. Address: "B. A.," ADVOCATE Office.

THE TURN OF THE TIDE!

GOODS in the dry goods line have for some time been falling in prices but lately they have taken a rise. Fortunately for our customers we bought early and are now showing an extensive and unusually attractive Fall Stock, consisting of Dress Goods in the leading lines of Fancy and Staple Dry Goods. Also Buttons and Trimming to match; Ladies' Mantles and Dress Cloths with Beaded Ornaments and Trimmings to match; Velvets, Satins, and silks in Plain, Striped and Brocades; Plain and Braided Jerseys; Ladies' Mantles, Ulsters and Ulsterettes; Men's and Boys' Readymade Suits and Overcoats; also, Suits made to order; Gents Furnishings, Flannels, Socks and Shoes, Stoves and Chinaware, Cutlery, Choicest teas, Floor Oilcloth, Hosiery Gloves, Fancy Wool Shawls, Table and Piano Covers, Hats, &c.

ALEX. McNAUGHTON & BRO.
Huntingdon, Aug. 30th, 1886.

HER PATTERN HAT.

BY RICHARD BRODSTETT.

"I have a smilinge face," she said,
And merry words for all I meet,
Yet some think me in sorrow
I don't it just sweet?
So many I do imply," she said.

"For the pattern hat," she said,
I seem like it you'll see,
Its shade is called 'sun-rise red,'
Will it do for me?
Is it a pretty shape," she said.

"Gerald Mrs. O.," she said,
one like it I met
she told m'made also did,
will suit the best
a prove her words," she said

"I pass without peer," she said,
"and lower thistle Dew,
the near it is; on my head
the nearest terms true,
But that's not hard for her," she said.

"And some, perhaps, may think," she said
"This old unity,
I were it not because," she said,
"It suits me so
The just to show it best," she said.

Sun Transformer and Sun Man.

The mills in this town employ people to make a living and power. For instance, Jones is a man who makes a living by turning the sun into power. Jones is a man who makes a living out of the sun. Jones does not say he is a transformer of the sun. There can be no doubt of the power he gives the people of this town when he makes the sun, and as he is called, was called with delight. Every morning, soon after the sun has appeared, a pale-faced, middle-aged little Assistant may be seen wandering around Alderman Frank and Selectman Steele, carrying with him a large pail of milk and a bucket of water. All of this principal places are on the alt. He is on union in his work that his presence is noticed by few others than his fellow patrons, who always greet him with every evidence of recognition and pleasure. He is not a fast worker, and he has to quiet their enthusiasm at noonrest. He lifts a corner of the sun, leaves a little more than by, and proceeds to the business of transforming it into power. It is a week for feeding much out, and also if there is a cloud in the sky, it is not in our cents additional. The cut-man is always, whatever the sun will enough, and he is generous and seek more congenial quarters. Also the surveyor comes around in the morning and notices the absence of his employee he immediately sets out in his hand for let, and the wanderer is generally found and returned to his proper beam. Sometimes the sun cannot be found, or other is soon substituted, and in this case he has lost of contentment and sunshine. The sun man is seen taken his milk and water, the pail and water bucket, and he is soon assistant to help him. Several days are also provided with meals.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Judgment of Eyes.

"What do you think of whether the most beautiful eyes?" was asked.

"Well, when I very serious," said the old gentleman, letting his eyes wander over the hall down beneath his feet, "I think eyes have has got the ideal eyes. It's a perfect vision or a valid beauty, and that's all I can say about it. Voices eyes are very rare. I don't mean deep blue eyes, but genuine purple eyes. Its does have times sometimes, but I've seen only one or two women with them, and never a man. They denote the person a character for fine—gentleness, intelligence, devotion, and boundless faith. Black eyes are common, and belong to no person.

"Brown eyes? Yes, they are plentiful, and physically, perhaps, the most beautiful eyes in the world. They are very common in the opinion of the opulent 7? mind a pretty well a pair of hanging chairs.

"Well, there are a hundred of different kinds of gray eyes, you know," said the old gentleman, "I have seen one had and some another. People haven't been so advanced enough to have more than four or five colors to apply to eyes; so any that not blue, or black, or brown, or hazel, are called gray. You seldom see a real stupid person with gray eyes, and a real stupid gray—that is always found among hardly intellectual people. Sometimes gray eyes will have purple dancie intense feeling; blue, gray eyes are general among people cold, kindly hearts. You never find a real mean man with a pair of blue-gray eyes.

"I've made a study of real blue eyes," he continued, "They are almost expressive of libertine, and generally has physical development, when they are large and bright. About nine-tenths of our engineers, railroad men, and people of adventure, have blue eyes, endow, and army and navy officers. Not many elected by physical perfection, have blue eyes. Very few blue eyed people ever live to be very old. Blue eyes are very dense to mental activity and cross of person. They are very pretty eyes, but, and have, there are rail people. They are not so scarce as is generally supposed; but I haven't made a close study of them, or of yellow eyes either. I think the latter are very fashionable, but I wouldn't imagine a yellow-eyed person would have any decided character.

After a further discussion about the value and unusually attractive Fall Stock, consisting of Dress Goods in the leading lines of Fancy and Staple Dry Goods. Also Buttons and Trimming to match; Ladies' Mantles and Dress Cloths with Beaded Ornaments and Trimmings to match; Velvets, Satins, and silks in Plain, Striped and Brocades; Plain and Braided Jerseys; Ladies' Mantles, Ulsters and Ulsterettes; Men's and Boys' Readymade Suits and Overcoats; also, Suits made to order; Gents Furnishings, Flannels, Socks and Shoes, Stoves and Chinaware, Cutlery, Choicest teas, Floor Oilcloth, Hosiery Gloves, Fancy Wool Shawls, Table and Piano Covers, Hats, &c.

ALEX. McNAUGHTON & BRO.
Huntingdon, Aug. 30th, 1886.

TALK OF THE DAY.

Item from the bowl—a parasol often hides a pair of spoons.

Practical jokes are like long troubles, there is a pain in the end.

"Why doesn't the sea serpent tackle the Niagara rapids?

Backwoods say they tell by observing their cowbones that "a man may smile and smile and still be willing."

If they continue pushing the Niagara rapids somebody may get hurt, and it probably will not be the rapids.

At Coney Island—"Hi, Isaac, see how beautifully the waves rise and fall." "Vere, Mickes, don't talk shop."

"No news worth printing," is an old, time-honored saying, but it won't do to practice it too often on the man who pays for his paper.

Site—"Why, Henry, what is the matter?" Tit—"I'm ill. I've swallowed a pool three inches deep." Site—"Lemon peel, you! and mix some in your toddy regardless!"

A man recently died in a Philadelphia restaurant while waiting for his hashed. "There are some of the slowest people in the world in Philadelphia.

"A successful operator," has kindly written a book telling us how to win in Wall street. Of course the writer knows the way, and wrote the book for amusement only.

Stranger.—"Why was a monument erected in this place?"

Native.—"Probably because he hadn't money to build a hotel."

A barber now in New York has married a wife in every state in the Union. If this is a basket of all barbers, it may account by association for their facility in small talk.

"Shave, Michael, they only cost a shinnal and a half apiece nowadays. Will ou give it ter the pig or the children?" Lavin lay in a bed, Mary Ann, dat's the kind of a gal th' lissenl av at, when he's hill."

Gen. Newton wanted to know if Hell Gate and Squibs based the public works of New York only. Next General Newton will usurp the public works and Squire will go to the other place.

A relenting father recently signified his desire for reconciliation with the lovely prodigal by the following curt telegram: "Sir.—Pueblo, Col.—The veal spread is ready when you come."

In Philadelphia. Miss Highsnetley—"Well I declare! Here is a letter from Mr. Van Kupper, of New York, to call! I tell all my friends I am engaged." Mr. Montrose—"Oh! they turn all well when he left."

A number of young men were paying a big Newfoundland dog a visit, when the animal chased them by saying: "Ya ean mak mimes fone of hem as ya lika, but ya ean mak no hoom by whom yere in swimmun."

Customer—"But isn't the treasure too long?"

Merchant—"No Tom long! Day is modest. It has come to your size. If your boot happen to be a trifle short you must procure an extra pair of stockings."

Early Manufacture of Glass.

The immediate inheritors of the Roman art of glass making were the Venetians, and although we cannot agree with those of her historians who assert that the birth of Venetian glass-making was contemporary with the foundation of the city, we have no hesitation in asserting that the manufacture was in active operation long before a single furnace was removed to the little island of Murano, in A.D. 1291. In order to prevent the art of glass-making from passing into other hands, the Council of Ten passed a law to the best degree tyrannical and vengeful, it inspired the imprisonment of his relations." It says, referring to those of a workman who carried the secret of his native country, and refuses to return, "he should, if he remained in Venice, himself will be charged to kill him." and orders are given to have the man secretly put out to the letter. The chemists of Venice were no longer in practical part of their studies in her navigators were during in the possession of their secrets. The glass of the thirteenth century the Venetians had recovered the lost art of blowing false pearls and producing imitation gems; and, made to the commerce of her wealth and the renown, she extended her trade to these articles, formed into reserve in the isles, to the outer as boundaries of the then known world. In spite, however, of the double jealousy with which the Venetian State guarded its secrets, the manufacture of glass art gradually moved out, and by the middle of the eleventh century German glass workers had acquired a reputation for decorating drinking glasses with enamelled paintings, chiefly armorial bearings. The manufacture of lead crystal, mentioned hereof, was known ages before in the Eastern "Tin Enamel, Lead Glass, Soda and Ash Glass," says Jacquemart, "is the glass of the Mohammedan world." The Germans were followed by the Bohemians, who, in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, attained to a high degree of excellence in the art of engraving on glass. They also introduced the art, much resembling Venetian objects of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, including enamelled and gilded, according to M. Saunzy, two centuries later, Bohemia became a considerable centre in our country, "Glass making in Bohemia," says Jacquemart, "is supposed to be of very ancient date; and, if the opinion of Pliny be well grounded, it dated prior to the Norman conquest. The art of enamelling and gilding into ancient ornaments beads and amulets was certainly known to the Egyptians, whose vases were found in the Upper Sahara." His authority for this last statement is the Journal of the Royal Institution Incorporated Societies. The first English glass-house, mentioned in records, for the manufacture of fine glass, were those of Jacob Mesnier, who petitioned Queen Elizabeth about the middle of the sixteenth century. Mesnier was a native of Bohemia. English manufacturers were for a considerable time much inferior to the Venetians, but, by the nearly a hundred years later, Sir Robert Mansel could write, "Our glass manufacture has since made rapid progress, and the white crystal glass-works of England indisputably excel, at this moment, those of any other country. England is. Apter Pellatt conclude, "yes eminent for her surfaces, colorless flint-glass for chandeliers and table articles; and the transparent metallic colors are of superior quality." With such materials, when artistic skill, the glass-worker of England and the English glass-makers will be hopeless, rival their Continental competitors to coloring, gilding, and elegant forms.—Great Industries.

New Fall and Winter Importations.

WILLIAM THIRD & CO. beg to announce that they are now receiving and opening out their Stock of Fall and Winter importations which have been purchased prior to the recent advance on general merchandise, comprising

Dress of Sicilians and Linsters of the newest designs
Cases of Indian Fancy Dress Goods, Whitney Plaids and Brocaded Velveteens in all the shades and prices
Cases of Black and Colored Cashmeres
Cases of Black Brocade Satins and Velvets
Cases of Black Brocade Satins and Velvets
Cases of Black Brocade Satins and Velvets

THE TWO VILLAGES.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

Over the river, on the hill,
Lyeth a village white and still;
All around it the forest trees
Whisper and whisper in the breeze;
Over it sunlight shadows go
Of passing breaks and drifting snow,
And mountain grasses, low and sweet,
Blow in the middle of every street.

Over the river, under the hill,
Another village lieth still;
There I see in the dusky twilight
Twinkling stars of household light,
Pine that gleam from the sandy door,
Mists that curl on the river's shore,
And in the main as grasses grow
For the wheels that hasten to and fro

In that village on the hill
There is sound of revelry and mirth;
The hearers are inclined with grave and Sober
Never a word to tell the hearer;
The merriest doors are always shut;
You cannot enter in half or but;
All the village lies asleep,
Never again to see or peep
Never in dreams to move and sigh,
Silent and life and low they lie.

In that village under the hill,
When the night is starry and still,
Many a voice and [illegible]
Lovely in the silence of [illegible]
And yonder village sighs [illegible] to go
Up to those sweet [illegible] forever
[illegible] forever wild
And [illegible] the strange fall—
"Let us go, and be built yon all."

[illegible]

Sim [illegible] is largely [illegible]
Have [illegible] of hindering
Their [illegible]
Chan[illegible] the fatal
[illegible] eminent [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
very [illegible]
drive [illegible] with
[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
will of [illegible] Washington.
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
than [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
[